(Re)defining the Forensic Accountant: merging practice, research and education

The forensic accountant is neither an accountant nor a lawyer but a practitioner capable of serving both. This conference will provide a forum for articulation of the views and needs of forensic accounting and legal practitioners with the objectives and outcomes of research and education in this rapidly growing profession.

The conference will offer three concurrent sessions focusing on views, needs and the interface between forensic accounting practice, research and education. The overarching theme of the conference will be the role of forensic accounting in facilitating the confidence and security of individuals, private and public sector entities and governments in day to day and long term activities.

The conference content will be presented in three program streams: practice, research, education. Papers dealing with traditional as well as new or innovative approaches to forensic accounting within one or more of these streams and instructional case studies are invited for consideration for inclusion in the conference program. Submitted papers may focus on theory, applications or practical experiences. Case studies should describe events to be instructional or highlighting lessons learned. Practitioners, educators and researchers may submit on topics including but not limited to:
