International Studies and Languages

International Studies

Are you interested in an internationally-oriented career?

Do you want to know more about the way our world is shaped and controlled?

International Studies prepares students for a world in which Australia has a stronger involvement in regional and international trade, security, environmental, cultural and humanitarian issues.

UniSA's International Studies program develops students' knowledge and capacity for cross-cultural comparisons – particularly of Asia, Australia and Europe. Our program enables critical analysis of world politics and international relations, including the key players in the global system (China, the European Union, Japan, Russia and the United States) and the changing international agenda including conflict resolution, defence, development, ecological sustainability, globalisation, human rights, regional integration, trade and global order.

Internationally-oriented professional careers exist for our graduates within government, business, commerce and academia. Working opportunities can be as wide-ranging as roles in foreign affairs, the United Nations, non-government organisations, multi-national business and overseas placements.

Languages and Intercultural Communication

In the modern world, being able to communicate with speakers of other languages is vital. At UniSA, students can study a language as part of many programs, including a specialist degree in Languages and Intercultural Communication. UniSA's Languages and Intercultural Communication program is designed to develop students who communicate effectively and sensitively across languages and cultures.

Graduates who are linguistically and culturally aware immediately broaden their potential in the job market. Industries which have an international scope require people with language skills, and career opportunities exist on a worldwide scale in sectors such as foreign affairs, education, business, marketing, tourism and defence.

Program overview

International Studies at UniSA offers a unique perspective on the human complexities of international affairs, including historical, political, economic, social and ecological issues. The program also offers students the ability to integrate practical offshore learning through the Hawke Ambassador International Volunteer Experience, and encourages students to further their academic and personal growth through a range of available language courses. The program seeks to prepare students for productive and socially responsible careers through development of strong body of professional knowledge and skilful analysis of international relations.

What will I study?

International Studies combines the study of international relations and world politics. It develops knowledge and capacity for cross-cultural comparisons particularly of Asia, Australia and Europe and the changing international agenda (including conflict resolution, defence, development, ecological sustainability, globalisation, human rights, regional integration, trade and global order). It is a requirement of the program that students complete an experiential learning component.

Experiential learning components

The Bachelor of Arts (International Studies) offers three options to gain professional experience:

» The Hawke Ambassador International Volunteer Experience Program

differs from traditional international exchange or study abroad programs. Students are based within an international non-government organisation (NGO), usually in an overseas location and working as a volunteer, rather than undertaking formal study at an overseas university. UniSA offers a range of scholarships for students undertaking the Hawke Ambassador International Volunteer Experience.

» The International Study Experience gives students the opportunity to study at one of the more than 60 universities in the Americas, Asia and Europe that are part of the University's International Student Exchange Agreements (for more information visit unisa.edu.au/exchange). UniSA offers a range of scholarships for students undertaking an International Study Experience.

» The Australian Professional Experience is a part-time internship in a professionally relevant organisation (such as a parliamentary office or community organisation) to complement academic studies.

Professional specialisation

Along with a major in International Studies, the program includes a professional specialisation in areas such as: Arabic, French, Italian, Japanese or others languages offered via cross-institutional study, accounting, international business, communication, environment, law, linguistics, management, marketing, mathematics, psychology, public relations, religion, sociology or tourism.

What does it take?

International Studies will appeal to the socially responsible person with an inquiring mind, and an interest in current world affairs, overseas travel and intercultural understanding.

Who will employ me?

Graduates have proven analytical skills and professional preparation as international relations practitioners, including demonstrated practical experience, and can gain access to a wide range of employment opportunities. Optional language study can also give students an advantage in the workplace.

Graduates are commonly employed internationally and locally in business and commerce, government departments and agencies (particularly those concerned with aid, defence, education, the environment, foreign affairs, intelligence and trade), international organisations (such as non-government organisations or the United Nations), marketing agencies and the media.

Professional recognition

Graduates may apply for membership, at an appropriate level, of the Australian Institute of International Affairs, the Australasian Political Studies Association, and the Royal Australian Institute of Public Administration.

Lauren Tilley

Bachelor of Arts (International Studies), Bachelor of Arts (Honours) student

'I've always taken an interest in politics, environmental issues and human rights and the broad range of subjects offered really appealed to me. The program offered by UniSA is very stimulating, practical and relevant to modern times. Also, Magill campus is simply beautiful and offers fantastic facilities.

From the very first year, the program challenged my preconceptions of how the world works and introduced me to different paradigms and modes of thought. International Studies has also taught me how to critically analyse everything – from newspaper articles to academic dissertations. I have thoroughly enjoyed having my worldview constantly challenged and am grateful for the intellectual flexibility this has afforded me.

The teaching staff at UniSA have been wonderful. They are always willing to go that extra mile to make their course as interesting and thought provoking as possible. They are very generous with their time and always available to answer any questions.'

Program overview

Language, culture and intercultural understanding are increasingly recognised as important for success in an internationalised world. The Bachelor of Arts (Languages and Intercultural Communication) prepares students to be linguistically and culturally proficient professionals working in a variety of contexts, locally, nationally and internationally.

This is the only degree in Australia to combine language studies and intercultural communication with a professional specialisation, allowing students to combine their language studies with a background in an area of professional expertise. Students also have the opportunity to practise their skills through a semester abroad or work-based placements.

On completion of the program students will be able to:

- » communicate effectively within and across languages and cultures
- » apply their knowledge of languages and cultures to their professional specialisation
- » negotiate with confidence and work collaboratively within and across languages and cultures
- » engage with diverse cultures as ethical professionals and citizens in local, national and international contexts.

What will I study?

This unique program combines a major in a foreign language, a sub-major or major in applied linguistics, a professional specialisation and the possibility of a semester abroad or a work placement.

Languages offered at UniSA include Arabic, French, Italian, Japanese and English as an Additional Language. Other languages, for example, Chinese, Indonesian, German and Spanish, are available through cross-institutional enrolment.

A second foreign language may be taken to complete a further minor or sub-major with approval of the Program Director.

Students complete at least six applied linguistics courses, including Introduction to the Study of Language, Language and Culture, Intercultural Communication, Language and Identity, Language and Culture in Professional Life. A further two applied linguistics courses may be taken to unless a second language is studied.

Students also gain a professional specialisation, which may be selected from areas including international business, global media and creative industries, international relations, management, marketing, tourism and hospitality, and Aboriginal studies. Professional applications courses provide opportunities for work placements, industry-based projects and the option of studying for a study period abroad during the degree. These opportunities allow students to further develop and practise their skills in a work-based context.

What does it take?

Students studying Languages and Intercultural Communication are interested in:

- » the nature and structure of language
- » the cultures embedded in languages and the exchange of meaning through communication
- » cultural diversity, communication and cultural identity
- » language as a way of knowing the world
- » accessing and using information/knowledge in languages and cultures
- » engaging with people of diverse cultures in ways that recognise differences and create connections
- » understanding themselves and their own identities
- » changing and emerging global possibilities
- » developing a multilingual and multicultural perspective.

Who will employ me?

In an increasingly globalised world, knowledge of languages and cultures enhances the employability of graduates across a range of professions. Industries which are globalised in nature and those dealing with clients from around the world all require people with language skills.

Depending on the chosen professional specialisation, graduates may find work in areas such as tourism and hospitality, public relations, international business, foreign affairs and diplomacy, defence and security, media and communication, international relations, interpreting and translating, and language teaching.

Andre Petrillo

Bachelor of Applied Language and Intercultural Communication [Now called Bachelor of Arts (Languages and Intercultural Communication)], Bachelor of Arts (Honours)

'Internationalisation is fast becoming an inevitable aspect of our contemporary world. My studies have given me the skills to critically examine aspects of language, culture and society, instrumental to working in the modern intercultural environment.

A genuine interest in languages and culture is beneficial in developing a critical and open-minded view of the world. As part of my Japanese language major I completed the Asian Studies program (one semester) at Kansai Gaidai University in Osaka. I was able to greatly improve my language proficiency through cultural immersion. The international exposure also helped me realise where we, as Australians, stand in the world.

While undertaking research in Australian applied linguistics, I was impressed that names of the people teaching me appeared in journal articles and books. Staff members are passionate about imparting their knowledge to students.'

Program overview

Focusing on the notion of ethical citizenship, the new Bachelor of Arts program offers students a choice of five strands of study. The strands are Communication, Creativity and Culture; History and Belonging; Languages; Literature and Language; and Politics and International Studies. The added value of the Bachelor of Arts is that it may provide a pathway to other programs such as Law and Journalism. The program is for students interested in international affairs, communicating in a global environment, and internationalising their life experience.

The program includes an opportunity for students to consolidate their knowledge through practical experience in their chosen field. The combination of theory and practical learning means that graduates will be equipped with the knowledge and experience to be immediately effective in their chosen profession.

This is a unique degree in South Australia, presenting students with a world of interesting possibilities.

The program will help to develop:

- » the capacity for critical analysis across a range of courses
- » a sound understanding and appreciation of a number of specialized discipline areas
- » the skills and knowledge for effective problem solving
- » effective communication skills
- » an appreciation of ethical citizenship

What will I study?

The Bachelor of Arts educates students on key concepts, theories, and significant issues facing Australians in an era of globalisation. Students will engage in debate and dialogue with their peers on topics such as human rights, ethics, the environment, cross-cultural understanding, war and peace, communication, politics, history and identity, as well as the meaning of citizenship.

The program has been designed in consultation with an advisory group made up of individuals from the corporate world and leaders in foreign affairs; languages; public policy and government; journalism and public relations. This ensures that the curriculum is dynamic and relevant. The program is taught by UniSA staff who are all highly qualified and come from a diverse range of cultural backgrounds, academic institutions, and industries. They will provide students with insight and knowledge on how to prepare for successful professional careers.

What does it take?

This is a specialised Arts program aimed at high achieving students who want a broad academic experience with flexibility and choice.

This program is suited to students who:

- » Want to embark upon an exciting career with the potential to make a positive difference in the world
- » Are creative and possess strong analytical skills
- » Have an interest in communication, languages, culture and diversity

Who will employ me?

Development of professional expertise is embedded in all of the courses of the Bachelor of Arts in order to prepare students for careers beyond their university education. The Bachelor of Arts prepares you for a variety of career pathways in communication, government, community organisations, and the corporate world. Graduates could find themselves working in large multinational corporations in Asia or Europe, the Australian government, or non-government organisations.

Program overview

The Associate Degree in Languages and Culture Studies allows students to develop a proficiency in listening, speaking, reading and writing in a chosen language and an understanding of the related culture and society. This is a unique opportunity for students of any undergraduate bachelor degree to study a second language concurrently with their main degree.

The Associate Degree adds an extra year to the length of the main degree, and students graduate with an additional award from the University.

For students whose first language is English, this is an excellent way to commence or continue foreign language studies while studying a bachelor degree. For students for whom English is a second language, this is an opportunity to become a highly effective communicator through further studies in English.

What will I study?

Students may choose to study courses in Arabic, English as an Additional Language, French, Italian, Japanese and Spanish. Currently only Italian is available fully online as well as in internal and external modes. Arabic is not currently available to non-UniSA students.

Students are also encouraged to undertake language study abroad, which counts for credit in this program.

Generally, students study only one language, however some students may be able to take one or more courses in a second language, depending on prior learning, and in consultation with the Program Director.

By going on overseas exchanges students can experience different study environments, and develop intercultural understanding, independence and personal maturity.

Please note

Entry to this program is open only to students with a current enrolment in a bachelor degree at the University of South Australia or current enrolment in a recognised bachelor degree at another Australian University. Students enrolled in their undergraduate degree at another university will need to complete a cross-institutional enrolment and demonstrate that they have the approval of their home university to undertake language studies at UniSA.

What does it take?

Language learning requires dedication and the courage to make mistakes and learn from them. Cultural enrichment and the ability to communicate and interact confidently with people outside one's own community are important skills for living and working in the increasingly globalised world. Language learning develops creative, analytical and critical skills which may be applied to a range of professional contexts which require intercultural communication.

Who will employ me?

Depending on the area studied in the concurrent bachelor degree, graduates will find work in organisations which require foreign language and intercultural skills. Industries such as business, government, education, engineering, art and design, science and technology increasingly require employees who have been educated for an international world and have the skills gained throughout this degree.

Graduates who can speak at least one language fluently in addition to their own have a clear competitive advantage. They also have a wider choice of employment opportunities beyond the English-speaking world. Professional services in various languages also need to be provided to people of non-English speaking backgrounds in the local community in health, welfare, education, banking and accountancy and many other professions.

Associate Degree in Languages and Culture Studies

'This program is great because you get to choose a language you are interested in and you can do it concurrently with another degree.

You learn how to hold a conversation in a foreign language, as well as discovering more about the culture, such as the music, the arts and the food.

UniSA staff are friendly and helpful. Magill campus is great, it is green and has a creek running through it.

I chose to do this degree with an education degree so I can apply for language teaching positions when I graduate. These positions will be easier to get because there is a shortage of language teachers.'

Program overview

The Bachelor of Business, (International Business, Finance and Trade), Bachelor of Arts (International Studies) double degree program develops professional level business knowledge and skills needed to conduct business in global and multicultural environment. The double degree program is carefully designed to provide students with highly developed conceptual and business analytical skills. The program also provides knowledge and skills in critical reflection, interdisciplinary skills and analysis in international relations and cross-cultural comparative studies, and basic communication in a foreign language.

Upon completion of the program students will not only have high quality business skills but will also possess an understanding of international relations and a good knowledge of another language and/or culture.

What will I study?

The focus of the international business program is on conceptual and analytical business skills; business strategy and decision-making, and on understanding international trade and finance issues as they affect business in the global setting. Courses include international economics, finance and investment, forecasting and business analysis, competitive strategy, and public policy.

The International Studies component combines the study of comparative and cross-cultural analysis of Australia, Asia and Europe, international relations and languages. It is strongly encouraged that students study overseas for at least one semester as a key part of this program. The courses undertaken overseas are accredited towards this degree and UniSA provides outstanding scholarship arrangements for this purpose. Students of the double degree program will also be able to participate in the Hawke Ambassador scholarship: an exciting new initiative involving working for an NGO overseas for one semester as part of their overseas studies component. Students of this program are required to complete at least four courses in a language other than English and may study any language currently offered at any university in South Australia.

What does it take?

Students undertaking this program should have an inquiring and analytical mind, and good verbal and written communication skills, as well as an interest in world economic, business and current affairs, particularly with regard to Australia's place in the international context. They should also have foreign language skills as well as an interest in, and a desire to experience, other cultural and social environments.

In addition, studying for a double degree requires a number of personal qualities such as dedication, self motivation and perseverance, some of the traits employers are increasingly looking for in graduates.

Who will employ me?

There are excellent employment opportunities for graduates of this program to engage their cross-cultural and business skills in Australia and overseas. The combination of language, international, political and cultural studies with high quality business skills offered by this program will give students a competitive edge in the international marketplace, where modern business is demanding graduates with a strong multidisciplinary international focus.

Graduates may find employment in many areas of business and commerce. Employment opportunities exist within any organisation seeking strong business graduates with highly-developed business analytical, communication and critical thinking skills. Other potential employers include government departments and agencies, particularly those concerned with aid, defence, education, the environment, foreign affairs, intelligence, trade, and marketing. Depending on the country and the position, graduates may also have the opportunity to work overseas, as either a visitor or a continuing resident.

In addition, through undertaking studies in a language other than English (or English language studies in the case of international students), graduates will find themselves well placed for employment in an increasingly international setting. Graduates who can demonstrate cultural sensitivity and speak at least one foreign language fluently, will have a clear advantage and may be presented with a wider choice of employment opportunities in a competitive business environment.

Bachelor of Arts (Honours)

'I studied European Union politics whilst on exchange as part of my undergraduate degree. I enjoyed this area of study and wanted to explore it further. I saw the Honours year as an opportunity to undertake intensive research on the European Union, and to get a taste for what it would be like to undertake a Masters degree or PhD.

I appreciated the support from UniSA staff. They were always willing to assist by answering questions, providing advice and were experienced in areas relating to international studies. My supervisor was also huge support. She provided invaluable assistance with the research and writing of my thesis.

Writing a thesis was the highlight of my time at UniSA. This gave me a real sense of achievement. I also developed invaluable research, writing and analytical skills. It has also given me the confidence and desire to undertake further study at a postgraduate level.'

Program overview

Journalists play a crucial role in society. They gather information from a diverse range of sources, and present this information in newspapers, on radio and television and online.

Journalism offers opportunities to cover important and sometimes dramatic events. It provides possibilities for experiences not encountered in other professions and offers many challenges. It is increasingly becoming a global field, with journalists – and those with journalistic skills and knowledge – employed in a range of contexts and cultural settings.

UniSA offers the only Journalism programs in South Australia. Studying journalism provides an opportunity to develop skills in print and broadcast journalism, to develop an understanding of major issues facing the working journalist, and to prepare for work in the media. By combining study in Journalism with study in International Studies, students can develop skills and understanding in journalism and related areas, and be able to apply these to a broad range of settings and social, cultural and political contexts.

What will I study?

Students in this double degree program complete professional majors in Journalism and International Studies. The Journalism component provides practical knowledge and a theoretical understanding of journalism in preparation for practice in this area. International Studies develops skills in applying cross-cultural, historical, political and international relations concepts to a variety of contexts. Other components include a minor in a language and electives in Journalism and in International Studies.

As well as being able to participate in industry internships, students may have the chance to broaden their studies through an international exchange where they can undertake their International Studies electives. All students are involved in producing stories for the Journalism students' regular online publication, The Warbler, and have the opportunity to take a role in the editing and production process.

What does it take?

Successful journalists have a good general knowledge of and a strong curiosity about the world around them; excellent interpersonal skills; persistence and flexibility; a high degree of proficiency with the English language; and an ability to work under pressure and meet deadlines. Journalists also often have to apply cross-cultural, historical, political and international relations concepts in the course of their work, so an interest in international relations and a willingness to develop knowledge in this area can improve employment prospects.

Who will employ me?

This program prepares students for employment in a wide range of journalism-related fields in various cultural settings. Although in the past many people entered journalism without studying at tertiary level, this is increasingly rare. Most of those entering Australian journalism are university graduates, and in South Australia most are graduates of UniSA Journalism. While success as a student does not guarantee success as a working journalist, it greatly improves individual career prospects.

Graduates of this program have an excellent employment record. They are employed as journalists and in related areas such as public relations or corporate affairs throughout Australia and in many places overseas such as the United Kingdom, Germany, the United States and Hong Kong. Journalism employers include local metropolitan and country media, the government sector and trade, business, and special interest newspapers and magazines.

Professional recognition

The Media, Entertainment and Arts Alliance (MEAA) is the only national journalists' professional association in Australia. While journalists are not required to be formally accredited to practise, many Australian journalists are members of the MEAA. UniSA Journalism graduating students are eligible for a year's free membership of the Alliance, and the Alliance promotes links between the industry and Journalism students at a state and national level.

Graduates may apply for membership, at an appropriate level, of the Australian Institute for International Affairs, the Australasian Political Studies Association, and the Royal Australian Institute of Public Administration.

Elise Beacom

Bachelor of Journalism, Bachelor of Arts (International Studies)

'An exchange in Europe after finishing school sparked my interest in language and international affairs. I wanted to pursue writing about these issues, which led me to find this double degree offering.

The highlight of my degree has been putting my skills into practice with the Hawke Ambassador Program. I did voluntary journalism work in Ghana for four and a half months, which was one of the best experiences I have ever had.

I was thrown in the deep end as a journalist right from the get-go, which was a bit daunting. The editor let me chase my own stories and I covered everything from the Nation's general elections, to road accidents and mental health.

If you're not picky about your first job, I think you can easily get work. I'm happy to go anywhere and I think that's the key, not being deterred about doing a stint in a rural area. I'm going to approach everything with a really open mind.'

Program overview

Increasing competition and the growing importance of international business is placing new demands on people in the world of marketing. Individuals with a knowledge and understanding of other cultures, strong marketing skills, and a multi-disciplinary international focus are in increasing demand. The double degree in Marketing and International Studies is designed to meet this demand.

The Bachelor of Management (Marketing) is a well-established and recognised program, providing students with a sound understanding of the complexities of marketing management. The Bachelor of Arts (International Studies) allows students to study comparative and cross-cultural issues affecting Australia, Asia and Europe, as well as international relations and foreign languages. As a combined double degree, this is an excellent program for students interested in understanding international relations, marketing and business on a global scale.

What will I study?

Graduates of this double degree will develop a thorough understanding of the principles and practice of marketing in a global context.

This double degree consists of eight core business subjects, including marketing, communication, law, accounting, economics, information systems, management and statistics. Students also complete another eight marketing subjects, including buyer and consumer behaviour, market analysis, marketing planning and various specialist topics.

Students also undertake eight International Studies subjects including strategy, diplomacy and intelligence, security in the Asia-Pacific region, and four language (or related) courses.

Overseas Exchange

For one semester students can study overseas at one of UniSA's exchange partners in Europe, North America, South America or Asia. Students of the double degree are strongly encouraged to participate in this exciting program which gives students an international perspective as well as subject credits.

Languages

The double degree provides an excellent opportunity for students to learn (or continue studying) a foreign language. International students, for whom English is a second language, have the option to learn a new language, or undertake further studies in English.

Graduate Skills

Students will graduate with strong marketing expertise as well as an excellent understanding of world economic, business and current affairs. During the degree students will develop analytical, as well as oral and written communication skills. A second language and a cross-cultural understanding are additional skills developed through the program, which are advantageous for graduates seeking employment overseas.

Employment opportunities

The combination of language, internationally-focused political and cultural studies, and high-quality marketing skills developed within this double-degree program, produces graduates who are well-placed to take advantage of the competitive local and international job market.

Employment in the marketing sector includes career opportunities in brand management, market research, public relations, advertising, communications, media and more. Other options for graduates of this double degree include careers in public and international affairs, diplomacy or international development assistance.

Potential employers include national and international business firms, government agencies, non-governmental organisations, aid organisations and other organisations with an international focus.

'One of the key responsibilities in my role as Marketing Manager is project managing the release of new products. This involves packaging design and selection, pricing decisions, promotions (advertising, public relations and online marketing) as well as production of training materials for pharmacy staff. I have a close relationship with our advertising agency, who I work with to develop product campaigns/ promotions and to coordinate media placement.

My career tip for future marketing students is to participate as much as possible by attending events, seeking work experience, and generally trying to develop a network. Having contacts is key! Meet as many people as possible and work on developing relationships, because you never know where they may lead.'

Program overview

The Bachelor of Management, Bachelor of Arts (International Studies) double degree is designed to prepare you as a globally-aware, socially responsible manager. This program enables you to study several, specialised areas of management, incorporating international relations and a foreign language.

Studying this double degree gives you the opportunity to obtain two degrees in four years: the Bachelor of Management and the Bachelor of Arts (International Studies). It will develop your knowledge, skills and analytical abilities in management, international relations, cross-cultural studies and communication in a foreign language. The program draws upon the skills and strengths of two schools at UniSA: the School of Management, from the Division of Business and the School of International Studies, from the Division of Education, Arts and Social Sciences.

The program also enables you to study for one study period (a semester) at an overseas university and UniSA offers some scholarships for this purpose. You are encouraged to study at a university overseas to increase your understanding of international relations, international management policy and to develop professional contacts.

What will I study?

You will study the Division of Business core courses, which act as a foundation to both degrees. These will give you a broad knowledge of important business areas, such as economics, marketing, information systems, law, communications, management, accounting and statistics.

As part of the Management program, you will be able to specialise in your own area of interest. Electives include entrepreneurship, marketing, accounting, desktop publishing, event management and tourism. All of these areas relate to business performance and studying them will help you to improve your leadership skills and productivity.

The International Studies part of the program will strengthen your understanding of the social, economic, political and religious issues at play in a global context. It complements the Management side, by offering courses within different areas of interest.

The International Studies courses are designed to develop and extend your knowledge of another language and culture - with the purpose of enhancing your understanding and appreciation of international business. You are encouraged to study a foreign language. Introductory language courses are available for beginners.

What does it take?

You should have good communication skills, along with an inquiring and analytical mind. An interest in world economic, business and current affairs - particularly with regard to Australia's place in the international context, is desirable. When you graduate, you may end up working overseas, therefore a desire to travel and a talent for languages would be advantageous.

Who will employ me?

The combination of language, international political and cultural studies with high quality management skills will give you a competitive edge in the international marketplace. Modern management demands graduates with a strong, multidisciplinary global focus, which is precisely what this double degree offers. Possible employers include national and international businesses, government enterprises and all companies with an international focus.

Professional recognition

As a graduate, you will be eligible for Associate Membership of the Australian Institute of Management (AIM), if you undertake regular professional development tasks.

Honours

Students who complete the program with a Credit or higher grade point average may be invited to undertake Honours.

Caroline Rosenthal

Bachelor of Management,
Bachelor of Arts (International Studies)

'I chose UniSA because many of the degrees are recognised internationally. It also has numerous affiliations around the world which give students the opportunity to study overseas.

In my fourth year at UniSA, I completed six months of my degree in Bordeaux, France. It was a great experience, enabling me to study abroad with a small group of other international students. It was definitely the highlight of my degree.

This degree has helped me understand all the complexities of working within a business environment. In addition to accounting, marketing and business development, it's given me a better understanding of international management, making me better equipped for employment in today's world of multi-national corporations.'

Program overview

This double degree will appeal to students who are interested in working as professional social workers as well as gaining a broader international perspective. The program covers all of the requirements for graduates to become professional social workers as well as a wide range of topics including world politics and cross-cultural studies. Through this unique combination of degrees, students gain a strong foundation in contemporary social work knowledge and analytical skills in international, cross-cultural and multicultural contexts.

What will I study?

This program combines the Social Work program with key courses of the International Studies program, allowing students to develop an international perspective to social work. The Social Work courses include studies in society, ethics and social work practice and include organisational, research and policy analysis.

Students undertake two substantial field placements in the first half of fourth year and the second half of fifth year. Each placement is for approximately 15 weeks full-time and is supervised by a professional social worker and supported by the University.

These placements provide a great opportunity to integrate social work knowledge and skills with an international perspective. Placements also allow students to gain practical experience in areas such as international aid and social development, to work one-to-one with individual clients, and to be involved in community development work, research or policy formulation.

Students will have the opportunity to undertake one placement overseas, with options for international field education placements existing in India, the Philippines, Canada and with the Australian Red Cross. New opportunities continue to emerge.

Please note

Prior to placement, all students are required to undertake training on child-safe environments and provide evidence of a current police check. Some field education placements may require students to hold a current drivers licence and recognised First Aid Certificate.

What does it take?

Students should have an inquiring mind, good verbal and written communication skills, and an interest in current world affairs – particularly with regard to Australia's place in an international context. Students also require a strong commitment to, and passion for, working for social justice and human rights. All forms of professional social work require effective interpersonal skills, a disciplined, objective approach and adherence to the profession's ethics and values. Social workers may be required to work in settings where resources and assistance are limited, and often work with individuals, families, organisations and communities under stress, or in situations where there is conflict or uncertainty.

Who will employ me?

The demand for professionally qualified social workers continues to be very high. Graduates work in positions across the health, welfare and educational sectors in government, non-government and local government agencies. Graduates will develop expertise to work in areas such as international aid, foreign affairs, diplomacy and international social development. They will work with communities from culturally and linguistically diverse backgrounds child and family welfare refugees and asylum seekers migrants torture and trauma survivors mental health and community support agencies detention centres hospitals people with intellectual or physical disabilities the aged or adolescents.

Professional recognition

Graduates are eligible for membership of the Australian Association of Social Workers. Graduates may apply for membership, at an appropriate level, of the Australian Institute for International Affairs, the Australasian Political Studies Association, and the Royal Australian Institute of Public Administration.

The Bachelor of Social Work may be awarded with Honours.

Anne-Marie Kilgariff

Bachelor of Social Work,
Bachelor of Arts (International Studies)

'I was drawn to UniSA because of the double degree offering that covered both of my interests – social work and politics.

My goal is to take my social work overseas, and I've always been interested in working in the United States. I am finding a lot of the international studies coursework covers the US, because it plays such a major part in the international system.

I hope to complete my work placement with Centrelink to pursue my interest in policy. It would be ideal to travel to the US with a solid knowledge of the Australian welfare system behind me.'

Student contributions

Student contributions are the amount you pay towards the cost of your program. The University determines the amount that you contribute within a range set by the Australian Government. The contribution that applies depends on which courses you choose to study and the contribution band in which those courses are classified. The amount of your student contribution also depends on the unit value of your courses of study (the equivalent full-time student load (EFTSL) value of the course).

As per the Australian Government guidelines, the student contribution amounts for 2010 are:

Band	Fields of study	Student contribution
National priorities	Mathematics, statistics, science	A$4,249
Band 1	Humanities, behavioural science, social studies, education, foreign languages, visual and performing arts, nursing	A$5,310
Band 2	Computing, built environment, health, engineering, surveying, agriculture	A$7,567
Band 3	Law, accounting, commerce, administration, economics, dentistry, medicine, veterinary science	A$8,859

Note: these amounts are for 1 EFTSL in 2010. The student contribution amounts for 2011 will be advised by the Federal Government in October 2010, and these will be available to view via unisa.edu.au/future/fees at that time.
